Mental Health Europe calls on MEPs to improve mental health policies in the EU - MHE Manifesto for the European Parliament Elections 2009

Ahead of the European Parliament Elections from 4-7 June 2009, Mental Health Europe (MHE) calls on the candidate MEPs to put mental health on the political agenda.

On 4-7 June 2009, the European Union citizens in the 27 member countries will elect 736 Members of European Parliament for a mandate of 5 years.

Good mental health is the backbone for a competitive and healthy population and strengthens social cohesion. Mental health problems affect a considerable part of the population. The World Health Organisation has publicised that one in four people will experience some form mental health disorder at least once in their lives. At any given time in society one person in ten suffers a mental disorder. The incidence of those who encounter mental health problems is commonplace and is as prevalent as those who suffer serious physical ill health. Mental health problems can affect any individual and any age group of society. Risk factors leading to mental ill health are many and varied but, in recent times, the international economic downturn has had a negative impact on the wellbeing of members of society with associated increases in people encountering mental ill health. More than ever, governments are seeking ways to curtail current expenditure and reduce resources allocated to provide a range of health services and in particular, mental health services. Those who advocate on behalf of those who suffer from mental health problems need to redouble their efforts to ensure an equitable level of resourcing for this important constituency of our society.

Mental health affects us all and therefore Mental Health Europe calls on the candidate Members of European Parliament to put mental health on the political agenda in Europe.

The MHE Manifesto is a call for action and expresses the vision of the MHE member organisations on the policy priorities in the field of mental health and wellbeing for the next years. In particular, commonly supported recommendations concern actions in the areas of education, employment, housing, social protection as well as prevention of mental health problems and stigmatisation.
